WHAT IS TRAINING FOR GENDER EQUALITY?

Training for gender equality is a transformative, long-term process to effect individual and collective transformation towards gender equality through consciousness raising, empowering learning, knowledge building and skills development.

It is a strategy that helps women, men and people of diverse gender identities to build gender competence and acquire the knowledge and skills necessary for advancing gender equality in their daily lives and work.

Training for gender equality is a key part of delivering our commitments on equal human rights for all and achieving the Sustainable Development Goals, particularly SDG 5 (‘gender equality and women’s empowerment’).

23 LOOKING AHEAD Courses and activities tentatively planned for 2021
The COVID-19 pandemic affected every facet of our lives in 2020, including learning. It has deepened pre-existing inequalities, exposing vulnerabilities in social, political and economic systems that are, in turn, amplifying the pandemic’s impacts. Hard won gains are at risk of being rolled back. Effective strategies for individual and collective transformation towards gender equality have never been more important. Simply put, we need training for gender equality – now more than ever.

Training for gender equality is a strategy for developing competent, gender-aware individuals, institutions and societies. It is a catalyst for transformation – on a personal level, in communities, organizations and societies. At the UN Women Training Centre, our experiences in 2020 reaffirmed our conviction that training for gender equality is essential to support UN Women’s mandate, address the fallout of the COVID-19 pandemic and achieve the SDGs.

Demand for online training surged this year. In 2020, we delivered 86 training courses on issues at the heart of UN Women’s strategic areas to 130,000 participants – twice the number of people we trained in 2019. Our existing online courses have never been more popular or more necessary. From courses on the professional development of gender trainers, gender-responsive budgeting, Gender Focal Points and many others, our training reflects a wide diversity of topics and a broad spectrum of audiences. In 2020, our eLearning Campus grew to include 147,487 users, an increase of 42% compared to last year. Virtual Dialogues by our Community of Practice engaged record numbers of participants.

We paired this phenomenal growth with an unwavering commitment to support the UN and other partners to realize commitments to gender equality and women’s empowerment worldwide. We worked with UN Women’s sections, other UN agencies, training institutions, governments, civil society, academics and practitioners to foster the knowledge, skills and approaches needed to make equality a reality. We continued to develop knowledge products and provide thought leadership on training for gender equality to strengthen our field.

As the world confronts the pandemic in 2021, we must use this moment to rebuild more equal, inclusive and resilient societies. Training for gender equality can – and must – help us do so.

LES SONS LEARNED FROM COVID-19 IN 2020

We used 2020 as a learning opportunity – a chance to test and strengthen our methodologies and pedagogies, and to affirm our feminist principles in new online settings. We learned more than ever about the impact, challenges and opportunities for training for gender equality from an online perspective.

What did we learn?

Demand for online training is soaring. Already on the rise before the COVID-19 pandemic, online training is set to grow exponentially as demand for remote learning skyrockets. The UN Women Training Centre is a testament to this growth. As the figure below shows, the number of users of our eLearning Campus shot up in 2020, doubling compared to last year.

Online training has immense potential. We know that online training has several advantages: it is relatively accessible and cost-effective, enabling us to reach out to a large number of participants worldwide. It addresses restrictions regarding travel and related expenses that are involved in face-to-face training. It can also offer significant time for self-reflection, enabling participants to learn at their own pace and potentially avoid the trap of ‘fast gender’ which face-to-face workshops – especially those with short timeframes – often face.

Online learning also poses a number of challenges. Gender trainers have had to rapidly adapt materials and methods from face-to-face to online modalities. Due to time and budgetary constraints, this has generally been done without reflecting on the pedagogical implications of this change. Addressing resistances is also especially complex in online settings. This is problematic, as engaging with resistances is part and parcel of training for gender equality’s transformative potential.

Online training for gender equality has never been more necessary. As we mark multiple milestones in 2020 – the 25th anniversary of the Beijing Platform for Action (Beijing+25), the 20th anniversary of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 on women, peace and security (UNSCR 1325+20) and the fifth anniversary of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG+5) – we are acutely aware of the urgent need to achieve gender equality.

“Attitudinal and behavioural change is very difficult [...] That is a challenge that online learning has not really managed to tackle.” - Frank Elbers, Virtual Dialogue panellist Replicating a face-to-face training environment virtually is particularly complicated as “all the communicative signs that embodied humans rely on are thinned, flattened, made more effortful or entirely impossible.” The relative anonymity of remote learning makes it more difficult to build bonds of trust between learners, which are vital for them to engage meaningfully with one another.

Training for gender equality is one of the most powerful tools we have to advance equality, but transformative approaches to training have declined. As our Beijing+25 paper reveals (see p. 20), approaches to training tend to be more transactional and instrumental – i.e. training as a tool for achieving other goals. Our paper offers recommendations for moving forward, such as harnessing technology to advance gender equality by developing innovative methodologies for online training. With COVID-19, this is especially prescient.

Develop innovative methodologies for online training for gender equality

Find ways to engage and reach diverse participants – both those being left behind by the digital divide, as well as privileged participants and decision-makers

Maximize creativity
Start with the learner – their capacities and needs
Tailor learning objectives to online scenarios
Develop new online training materials, instead of using existing face-to-face materials online

Use existing online tools to harness technology in the service of gender equality

Mix audiovisual methods, ice-breakers, case studies, role plays and individual assignments
Arrange virtual informal get-togethers
Use co-facilitation to reduce strain on trainers
Enable multiple voices to be heard with distributed open collaborative courses
Explore virtual reality and AI software

HOW CAN WE MOVE FORWARD TO STRENGTHEN TRAINING FOR GENDER EQUALITY POST-COVID-19?

Improve online training tools in line with feminist pedagogical principles

Consider how tools can be used to promote action for social justice and gender equality
Ensure accessibility for all, including participants with disabilities or different language abilities
Experiment with new techniques to engage participants

Develop innovative methodologies for online training for gender equality

Develop new online training materials, instead of using existing face-to-face materials online
The UN Women Training Centre is UN Women’s training arm. We strengthen skills and knowledge on gender equality through transformative training that enables UN agencies, governments, civil society and other partners to realize commitments to gender equality, women’s empowerment and women’s rights.

Training for gender equality raises awareness of gender equality worldwide.

It builds skills in thematic areas key to advancing gender equality.

It fosters changes in attitudes, behaviours and practices that are vital to achieving gender equality.

It promotes dialogue and social mobilization towards joint action on gender equality.

Training for gender equality is one of the most powerful tools we have to achieve the individual and collective transformation at the heart of the SDGs.

The UN Women Training Centre is a world leader in putting feminist pedagogies into practice and a thought-leader in analysing what feminist pedagogies mean in the field of training for gender equality. As our ultimate goal is to transform patriarchal systems, our learning processes do not mirror hierarchical, patriarchal approaches. Instead, learning occurs in a spirit of equal and egalitarian participation, where all learners are teachers and all teachers are learners.

Core principles of feminist pedagogies guide our work:
- Participatory, non-hierarchical and power sharing learning
- Validation of personal experience
- Encouragement of social justice, activism and accountability
- Development of critical thinking and open-mindedness

Key frameworks and international normative instruments frame our approach:
- Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Violence against Women (CEDAW)
- Beijing Platform for Action (Beijing PFA)
- Sustainable Development Goal 5 (SDG 5: ‘Achieve gender equality and women’s empowerment’)

HIGHLIGHTS OF OUR TRAINING COURSES IN 2020

In 2020, the UN Women Training Centre's courses strengthened capacities on gender equality worldwide, fostered attitude and behaviour change, and stimulated participants' capacities to collaboratively put their knowledge, motivation and skills into practice – in order to transform their work, communities and daily lives into more gender equitable spaces. This section presents highlights of our training courses this year.
In 2020, a third cohort of gender trainers completed the Certified Professional Development Programme for Gender Trainers (April–August 2020) jointly developed by the UN Women Training Centre and the Royal Tropical Institute of the Netherlands (KIT).

Their certification expands the pool of experts qualified to carry out transformative training for gender equality. This transformative course will have lasting repercussions for the ways in which trainers deliver high quality training for gender equality – now and in the future.

In light of the COVID-19 pandemic, the third module of the six-month certification programme was successfully virtualized and delivered entirely online.

The programme strengthened trainers’ capacities in three interrelated domains: conceptual depth and clarity on gender and development theory and practice, feminist practices, and training skills and methods.

The course sharpened participants’ training skills and knowledge of gender and development concepts, while enabled them to better employ learning and knowledge strategies, including by deepening capacities for critical thinking, applying feminist pedagogies and adopting intersectional approaches.

Fostering a network for sustained exchange among gender trainers from around the world is another milestone for the field.

Using a combination of lectures, presentations, workshops, virtual seminars, practical activities and assignments, mentoring and networking, the programme contributed to re-capturing and re-imagining gender training as a feminist project, while spearheading a new approach to training for gender equality.

This is especially timely given the changing landscape of development assistance and the impetus of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) to re-think how to address gender inequality to ‘leave no one behind’.

“The interactive course activities challenged our thinking about a range of interlinked issues; the multiple viewpoints afforded by our diverse work/life/backgrounds enabled all of us to ‘sharpen the saw’ and to re-think what may have been some preconceptions around other cultures, other countries, other ways of ‘doing gender’.” - Course participant

GENDER FOCAL POINTS: SUPPORTING CHANGE THE UN SYSTEM

By strengthening the capacities of UN staff to mainstream gender, our courses help to deliver UN Women’s coordination mandate, to make the UN more effective and inclusive, and to strengthen our collective capacities to achieve the SDGs.

In 2020, transformative change was the focus of the joint course by the UN Women Training Centre and the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organization (ITC-ILO), Embrace change in a new era: Empowering UN Gender Focal Points. The 8th edition of this training course for Gender Focal Points (GFPs) was delivered entirely online for the first time ever, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

This eLearning journey enabled participants to engage in question and answer (Q&A) sessions with UN officials and international experts about gender mainstreaming within organizations post-COVID. It included practical discussions on how UN entities can help achieve gender equality, identifying how Gender Focal Points can become a key part of the solution. Together, participants worked virtually with their peers in small breakout sessions, examined best practices and tools from across the UN system.

Overall, the course supported Gender Focal Points to:

- Recognize gender inequalities within their organizations, especially after COVID-19.
- Use the international legal framework to strengthen gender equality and women’s empowerment within UN entities, supporting their organization to achieve UN targets.
- Manage and apply strategies and tools to efficiently mainstream gender equality and the empowerment of women within their organizations in the ‘new normal’, post-COVID-19.
- Design an organizational strategy for change that is capable of effectively addressing resistances.
- Devising a concrete individual action plan to strengthen gender equality and women’s empowerment for immediate implementation in their organizations.

“[The training] proved to be the perfect bridge to unify our motivation and commitments with required skills. Now working together is so different as a team and more impactful indeed.”
- Sajida, United Nations Support Office in Somalia, course participant

“This course provided a rewarding opportunity to learn more about the UN’s gender architecture and issues, as well as enriching exchanges with Gender Focal Points from various agencies operating in different contexts.”
- Sophia Pierre-Antoine, International Organization for Migration, course participant

Gender-responsive budgeting (GRB) means budgeting in a way that works for everyone (women and men, girls and boys) by ensuring that the collection and allocation of public resources is carried out in ways that are effective, equitable and contribute to advancing gender equality and women’s empowerment. In essence, GRB is vital for both gender justice and fiscal justice.

Our 2020 GRB course in Colombia strengthened participants’ analytical skills around gender-responsive budgeting, thereby enhancing capacities to contribute to progress on the SDGs. The moderated online course supported participants to identify GRB methods used in Colombia – including by territorial entities – propose possible areas for improvement, and engage in collaborative learning in a virtual community.

Participants – including representatives of the Government of Colombia, development practitioners, and women’s organizations at the national and sub-national levels – learned how to apply GRB as a tool for gender equality in decision-making on resource allocations and budgets.

With strengthened capacities, they are now well-placed to identify entry points in the budget cycle for introducing GRB, as well as to develop sustainable GRB strategies.

“The course is very well designed. The definition, conceptualization and examples of the themes allowed me to strengthen my knowledge related to budgeting and planning with a gender perspective. In this way, my previous knowledge was strengthened and I acquired key concepts on this subject.”

DEVELOPING NEW COURSES IN 2020

The UN Women Training Centre and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) joined hands to develop a new I Know Gender module on Gender Equality and Migration, to be launched on the 8th of March 2021. This 16th I Know Gender module will help learners understand how gender shapes every stage of the migrant journey, and why gender equality matters in migration. It is a unique chance to step into the shoes of migrants and see things from their perspective. Through this module, participants will learn about global migration trends from a gender perspective, how to conduct a gender analysis and how to start mainstreaming gender equality into their everyday work at every stage of the migration cycle.

Another course developed in 2020 and launched on the 8th of March 2021 is Gender Equality in Transportation, developed by the UN Women Training Centre, UN Women’s Safe Cities and Safe Public Spaces Global Initiative, and the World Bank’s Transport Global Practice and Open Learning Campus. This first-of-its-kind course examines the often-invisible gender issues surrounding mobility in the transport sector. It moves us away from ‘gender-blind’ transport planning – which does not consider the mobility needs of its diverse range of users, particularly women and girls – and towards approaching transportation through a gender lens. It looks at strategies that planners can use to address the difficulties women face in getting jobs and climbing the career ladder in transport, a sector dominated by men. It also proposes practical solutions for enhancing inclusion and equality across the sector, balancing questions on ‘why’ this is vital with operational questions on ‘how’ we can do this. The course benefitted from funding generously provided by the Government of the Republic of Korea.

At the UN Women Training Centre, we worked to make the field of training for gender equality more transformative in 2020 by developing analytical knowledge products and enabling participatory knowledge sharing. Our publications and virtual dialogues advanced cutting-edge debates in the field, especially as the COVID-19 pandemic highlighted the urgent need for learning that accelerates transformative change towards gender equality.
In 2020, the UN Women Training Centre’s knowledge products continued to advance debates in the field of training for gender equality. Our latest paper, Training for Gender Equality: A Review for Beijing +25, explores how training for gender equality has evolved from the Beijing Platform for Action to the present day. As we mark 25 years since the Beijing Conference, the paper strengthens understandings of training as a strategy to achieve transformative change for gender equality.

Mapping out key developments, the paper reflects on what has worked well and what challenges remain. It identifies a decline in gender-transformative approaches to training since 2005, in favour of more transactional and instrumental approaches. In many cases, power relations are not explicitly tackled in training design, implementation and evaluation. This needs to be addressed urgently so that we can reclaim the transformative potential of training to contribute to gender equality across all of the Beijing Platform for Action’s 12 critical areas of concern, and gender mainstreaming in general. The paper offers recommendations in line with the Secretary-General’s Report of the 25-year review – by thematic area and by cross-cutting priorities for action. Ultimately, it argues that training should be acknowledged as a key component of gender-transformative change.

This paper is concerned with the extent to which training for gender equality since Beijing has been transformative rather than merely transactional. Training should be acknowledged as a key component of gender-transformative change.

Training for gender equality can be a transformative process in its own right, when embedded within broader change programmes. This is urgent to reclaim the transformative potential of training to contribute to gender equality across all critical areas of concern [of the Beijing Platform for Action].”

VIRTUAL DIALOGUES IN 2020

Collaboration and participatory dialogue is at the heart of our work at the UN Women Training Centre. In 2020, we continued our partnerships with UN Women offices, UN agencies, training practitioners, experts, academics and learners. Virtual Dialogues by our Community of Practice (CoP) contributed to the field of training for gender equality through participatory engagement, debate and collective knowledge production. As a hub of resources, the CoP also offered a growing resource library featuring over 350 training resources, as well as up-to-date databases of training opportunities and institutions.

The 16th Virtual Dialogue hosted by the UN Women Training Centre’s Community of Practice explored how online methodologies can help us deliver transformative training for gender equality in the context of COVID-19, and beyond. The event in July–August 2020 drew together five expert webinar panellists and 218 audience participants from around the world. As the COVID-19 pandemic raged, participants reflected on what kinds of online methodologies work well for training for gender equality, what their limitations are, and how we can strengthen these methodologies – including by integrating an intersectional perspective – to evoke transformative change through training.

“New tools can allow us to feel almost as comfortable as we did in our [face-to-face] workshops. [...] We should be pushing all these billions of dollars in investments towards giving us the tools to be able to do those kinds of things online.”

- Waithira Gikonyo, Virtual Dialogue panelist
Coinciding with the 25th anniversary of the Beijing Platform for Action in 2020, the CoP also hosted a Webinar on our Beijing+25 review paper. Expert panellist Dr Caroline Moser joined the paper’s author, Dr Lucy Ferguson to launch the review paper, which prioritizes changes in the discourse around gender and the rationale for training. They highlighted how the paper uses the concept of transformation – a term which in 1995 was aspirational rather than operational – and makes a dualist distinction between training which is transformative and training which is transactional, instrumental or technical. The webinar highlighted the paper’s key findings and recommendations on how training for gender equality has evolved in the past 25 years, and how best to move forward.

“In the current climate, the UN’s commitment to gender training needs to be applauded. But analysis of sector level differences between transactional and transformative gender training is critical.”

- Dr Caroline Moser, Webinar panellist

2020 was a watershed year. The world was rocked to its core by the COVID-19 pandemic. We marked the 25th anniversary of the Beijing Platform for Action (Beijing +25), 20 years since United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 on women, peace and security (UNSCR 1325 +20), and five years since the Sustainable Development Goals were launched (SDGs +5). As the pandemic’s seismic impact continues to unfold, it is imperative to seize the moment to ‘recover better’ – to prevent progress from being rolled back, to continue moving towards a gender equal world, and to leave no one behind on this journey.

For us at the UN Women Training Centre, our focus for 2021 is clear. We will continue to strengthen capacities for gender equality worldwide through transformative training and learning, including by developing new courses and updating existing ones.

We will rise to the challenge of delivering more and better online courses to meet surging demand – expanding our training offer, diversifying the languages in which we offer training (including English, Spanish, French, and Arabic) and adapting our modalities and pedagogical approaches to the ‘new normal’.

We will further streamline the function of training within UN Women to ensure that all staff can access the knowledge and tools they need. We will strengthen partnerships across the board, while enhancing our field through contributions to quality assurance, certification, evidence generation and participatory dialogue. We will continue to be a champion and enabler of individual and collective transformation through training for gender equality.
