WORKING PAPER ON ONLINE TRAINING AND FEMINIST PEDAGOGIES

Online training has become the predominant modality for delivering training for gender equality worldwide since the COVID-19 pandemic began. The UN Women Training Centre's new working paper explores the implications of this shift to online learning from the perspective of feminist pedagogical principles and practices. It sheds light on how to make online training for gender equality a truly transformative process in the context of online training, based on the UN Women Training Centre's participatory research and discussions with trainers. While online training offers exciting opportunities and trainers are adapting to new conditions, there remain challenges to converting this energy and innovation into long-lasting change for gender equality.

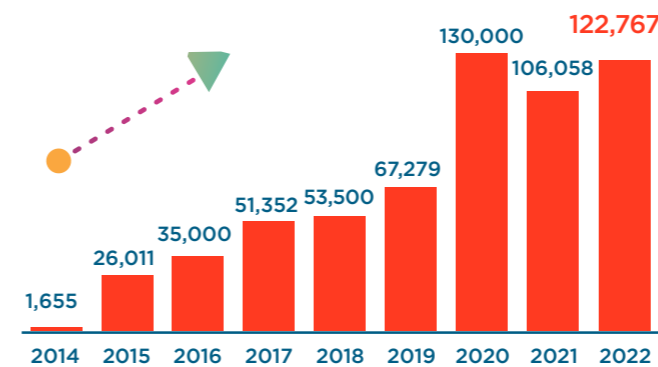

VIRTUAL DIALOGUE WEBINAR REPORTS

The discussions of both Virtual Dialogue hosted by the UN Women Training Centre's Community of Practice (CoP) in 2022 have been summarized in reports, highlighting key inputs by panellists and audience participants during the webinars and forum discussions on Online Training and Feminist Pedagogies, and on the launch of I Know Gender module 17 on Gender and Organized Crime.
